

- An electronics engineer carries out the evaluation, project, management, maintenance and change of electronic systems or parts of electronic systems

- He is also aware of the design, installation and startup of electronic equipment of radio, TV, telecommunications, process control and robotics

- An electronics engineer carries out technical and economic studies and advises with regards to services and commercialization of electronic equipment

- He is also in charge of the maintenance, inspection, supervision and modification in electronic laboratories

- He makes arbitrations, expertises and valuations related to the electronic systems

- He is also involved in Health and Industrial Safety concerning the areas mentioned before